

The Presentation Log: NCPHP Speaks About Burnout and Other Topics to Medical Professionals Across the State
November 13, 2017

In the last month, NCPHP has given several educational presentations across North Carolina about NCPHP's services, which provide healing and restoration to healthcare professionals, empowering them to find resolution and return to their profession of caring for others.

On October 16, NCPHP Medical Director Dr. Clark Gaither spoke with a group of 27 Maria Parham Hospital staff members on the signs and risks of physician burnout. An extreme condition facing our healthcare providers, more than half of U.S. physicians experience significant burnout symptoms. Dr. Gaither also spoke on this subject at the Haywood County Medical Society on November 9.

Dr. Joe Jordan, CEO of NCPHP, spoke at Wingate University on October 30. Attended by nearly 90 first year pharmacy students, Dr. Jordan's presentation provided an overview of NCPHP, its mission and its services.

NCPHP regularly presents at hospitals, private practices, associations, society meetings and conferences to provide education about NCPHP services. Experts speak on a wide range of topics related to substance use disorders and other issues that can negatively impact the safety, care, and services delivered by medical professionals.

Medical Director Dr. Clark Gaither presents at Maria Parham Hospital on October 16, 2017.